The greatest sacrifice will no doubt be what the medical fraternity does for the society and every doctor has some where or the other faced adversities that have challenged his existence and most of the times he has come out unscathed and victorious to document his travels and experiences.

Delivering quality care in a cost effective manner

Dr. Parth Desai
MBBS, M.D, PGCHM(IIM-C)

India aspires to provide quality and affordable healthcare to all. Challenges are many, which range from a rise in diseases, both communicable and non-communicable, to maintaining quality access and affordability, health infrastructure, financing, rational pricing of essential devices, trust deficit, policies and regulatory framework. The National Health Policy (NHP) of 2017 envisages Universal Health Coverage (UHC) for all. However, high cost of medical services is ailing this sector and we need to address this challenge.

Approximately 63 million people fall into poverty each year due to lack of financial protection for healthcare needs. India has only 1.1 beds per 1,000 population in India, compared to the world average of 2.7. With introduction of government schemes and increasing pressure of insurance companies to deliver high quality care at reduced rates, healthcare institutions stand at a crossroads currently. So we will discuss some of the ways of measuring and reducing cost in our healthcare set ups.

Measuring accurate cost of treating a patient :

Only few acknowledge a more fundamental source of escalating costs: the system by which those costs are measured. To put it bluntly, there is an almost complete lack of understanding of how much it costs to deliver patient care, much less how those costs compare with the outcomes achieved.

Time-driven activity-based costing (TDABC) system assigns costs accurately and relatively easily to each process step along the path. It requires that providers estimate two parameters at each process step: the cost of each of the resources used in the process and the quantity of time the patient spends with each resource. For doing costing according to TDABC we need to first identify disease in question, map the processes involved in patient care and accurately assign costing to each step which includes use of consumables, time spent with each manpower and with biomedical equipments. Finally indirect cost like electricity, administrative, real estate etc can be assigned based on duration of stay of the patient in the hospital.

Eliminate unnecessary process variations and processes that don't add value :

There are significant variations in the processes, tools, equipment, and materials used by physicians performing the same service within the same unit in the same facility. For example, in total knee replacement, surgeons use different implants, surgical kits, surgeons' hoods, and supplies, thereby introducing substantial cost variation in treating patients with the same condition at the same site. Evidence Based Medicine (EBM) is the key in standardising our practices to deliver care to our patients.

Improve resource capacity utilization :

The TDABC approach identifies how much of each resource's capacity is actually used to perform processes and treat patients versus how much is unused and idle. Managers can clearly see the quantity and cost of unused resource capacity at the level of individual physicians, nurses, technicians, pieces of equipment, administrators, or organizational units. Resource utilization data also reveal where increasing the supply of certain resources to ease bottlenecked processes would enable more timely care and serve more patients with only modestly higher expenditures.

Optimize over the full cycle of care :

Health care providers today are typically organized around specialties and services, which complicates coordination, interrupts the seamless, integrated flow of patients from one process to the next, and leads to the duplication of many processes. In the typical care delivery process, for example, patients see multiple providers in multiple locations and undergo a separate scheduling interaction, check-in, medical consultation, and diagnostic workup for each one. This wastes resources and creates delays. The TDABC model makes visible the high costs of these redundant administrative and clinical processes, motivating professionals from different departments to work together to integrate care across departments and specialties. Eliminating unnecessary administrative and clinical processes represents one of the biggest opportunities for lowering costs.

Investment in Information Technology :

The use of Health IT in medical clinics improves the quality of healthcare that is delivered by providing accurate patient records and allows doctors to better understand the patient's medical history. Having a comprehensive patient history empowers doctors to more accurately treat ailments and prevent over-prescribing medications which can be fatal. Without medical records, physician's would need to depend on the patient's memory, which can lead to inaccurate medical history due to forgetfulness, complex drug names, and ailments affecting the patient's recollection. There is less need of administrative staff if proper information technology is in place at the hospital.

Common Procurement Body :

Medical association can play a vital role in establishing a platform whereby a common procurement body can be established to negotiate rates for equipment, pharmacy and consumables. This can be a real game changer for all of us as our collective bargaining power will be much higher than individual ones.

Reinventing Reimbursement :

The current system of reimbursement is disconnected from actual costs and outcomes and discourages providers and payors from introducing more cost-effective processes for treating patients. With today's inadequate costing systems, reimbursement rates have often been based on historical charges. That approach has introduced massive cross subsidies that reimburse some services generously and pay far below costs for others, leading to excess supply for well-reimbursed services and inadequate delivery and innovation for poorly reimbursed ones. Government and insurance companies must be realistic and scientific in their costing and reimbursement rates. Rates should be such that quality is not affected/enhanced and patient safety is not compromised.

Accurately measuring costs and outcomes is the single most powerful lever we have today for transforming the economics of health care. As health care leaders obtain more accurate and appropriate costing numbers, they can make bold and politically difficult decisions to lower costs while sustaining or improving outcomes. Accurate costing also unlocks a whole cascade of opportunities, such as process improvement, better organization of care, and new reimbursement approaches that will accelerate the pace of innovation and value creation. We are struck by the sheer size of the opportunity to reduce the cost of health care delivery with no sacrifice in outcomes. Accurate measurement of costs and outcomes is the previously hidden secret for solving the health care cost crisis.
